Cairns IRIS Helps Find Hidden Fire As LVFD Saves Leroy Ave. Home

Things got a bit frightening for a short time Thursday evening when the chimney on Doreen and Eberhard Alsen's Myer's home caught fire, but a swift response and the first application of Lansing's new thermal imaging fire detection system saved their home and minimized collateral damage.

"The firemen did a wonderful job," said Mrs. Eberhard the following chilly Saturday from the comfort of her home. "They couldn't have been better or more professional. They reassured us and kept us informed throughout the fire. We're grateful."

Lansing responded to the 9:30pm call with 28 men and found heavy smoke and embers coming out around the chimney chase at the top. Dismantling the chimney allowed the firemen to get at most of the fire.

Though the Cairns IRIS infrared thermal imaging system had not yet formally been placed in service, it was brought to the scene and enabled firemen to pierce the smoke and "see" heat and embers behind walls. "We probably would have found the hot spot a little later on in the fire," said Chief Chris Burris, "but the camera hastened our attack and brought the fire under control."

Though there was considerable damage to the chimney and a portion of the roof, the home was saved and there were no injuries to residents or firefighters.

The Cayuga Height Fire Department stood by in their station for mutual aid backup.
